Qu.1. "Societies all over the world have long had an interest in the ways in which their young are prepared for citizenship and how they learn to take part in civic life. Today that interest might better be described as a concern- in fact, as a growing concern, particularly in democratic societies. There is evidence aplenty that no country, including our own dear country Ghana, has achieved the desired level of informed understanding and acceptance of the rights and responsibilities among the totality of its citizens that is required for the constant and robust nurturing, maintenance and improvement of any constitutional democracy."

Critically examine and discuss the above statement. In your answer cogently explain and show why, how, and in what way or ways, our young democratic nation should make civic education a prime and pivotal concern.

[PLEASE TURN OVER]

Qu. 2. Consider carefully the following statement and then answer questions a. and b. hereof:

"Accountability, like electricity, is difficult to define, but possesses qualities that makes its presence in a system immediately detectable. To touch a live wire in a circuit is enough to establish the presence of electricity without further need of definition. The shock of recognition that attends the presence of accountability in a system of government may not be quite as direct, but it is nonetheless detectable.

Accountability must therefore be seen as the activating, but fragile, element permeating a complex network connecting the Government upward to Parliament and the Executive and downward and outward to a geographically dispersed bureaucracy grouped in a bewildering array of ministries, departments, agencies, units, boards; services commissions, district assemblies and other public entities or bodies. Accountability moves through this network like the current in a circuit but always in some sort of relation to the control centre, the Executive and the Cabinet. The dispersal and structural complexity of the bureaucracy makes the control centre vulnerable to stoppages and short-circuits or overloading. The control centre the Government, although ultimately responsible for answering to the legislature, may find itself out of touch with what is happening, or failing to happen, at the other end of the network. Similarly, a signal from the centre may never reach the departmental unit, agency, or district assembly concerned or may reach it in so garbled or confused a state that judgments as to performance become impossible to make.

In short, accountability relies on a system of connecting links - a two way circuit involving a flow of information that is relevant and timely, not only for managers but for those who must scrutinize the decisions and deeds of managers. We gauge its presence when we observe that a certain discipline has been imposed upon those who are assigned roles and duties in the system. In simple terms, accountability is that quality of a system that obliges the participants to pay attention to their respective assigned and accepted responsibilities, to understand that it does matter. Thus, the likelihood that agreed goals and objectives will be attained is enhanced."

2.a. In the context of today's fiscal situation in Ghana, the pervasiveness of governmental, activity, and with regard also had to the great and continuing pressures facing those who now presently exercise leadership in the public service and government at all levels in our country, what functional criteria, in your carefully reasoned, coherently structured and considered view, must be defined, designed or devised to guide and assure the proper functioning a of all actors in such a system to ensure that they are held fully and clearly accountable in a progressive and unbroken chain of linkages?

2. b. In the light of the above quoted statement, briefly indicate or show what positive role (or roles), if any, you see for 'accountability' or accountable systems in challenging, managers and leaders in the public service of Ghana to rediscover a sense of frugality and a commitment to the careful husbanding and deployment of resources, in order to further government programmes and activities as well as make possible or bolster the efforts of the many Ghanaians, both inside and outside government, who are commendably working to achieve effective, efficient and responsible government.
